

Hannah Huffstutler

Hannah Huffstutler, MHS, PA-C, serves as Assistant Professor and Co-Director of Clinical Education in the Department of Physician Assistant Studies at the University of South Alabama, a role she assumed in 2025. She first joined the University in 2015, previously serving as Assistant Professor and Director of Clinical Education, as well as an instructor in the University's Simulation Department.

Professor Huffstutler brings more than 15 years of clinical experience as a physician assistant, with practice experience in orthopedics. She currently practices in orthopedics at University Hospital, where she serves as a first assistant in surgery.

Professor Huffstutler earned her Master of Health Science in Physician Assistant Studies from the University of South Alabama and her Bachelor of Science in Biological Sciences from Graceland University. She has been a certified physician assistant through the NCCPA since 2009 and is a longstanding member of the Alabama Society of Physician Assistants.

She is deeply engaged in community service, with sustained involvement in the Escambia County Special Olympics and Ronald McDonald House events. As an educator and program leader, she is committed to preparing future physician assistants who are clinically skilled, compassionate, and ready to serve the evolving needs of their communities.
